

Dear FCC Commissioners & Staff:

I am concerned about the threat of dropping the requirement for telephone companies to provide ISPs access to internet carriers like mine--iglou. I prefer using iglou over a large telephone carrier. Our telephone company Verizon South does not offer ISPs access because we live in a rural part of the county and will be among the last to have access to this service. I do not want to pay higher rates than what I pay now for internet access. Please consider carefully what you are considering. You will cut many rural Americans out of high quality service to the internet. This is not just or ethical.

Mary Witt

Sincerely,
